Indiana State Police investigating shooting death near Dupont

BY THE COURIER STAFF

Indiana State Police and the Jefferson County Coroners Office are conducting a death investigation into an early morning shooting Tuesday near Dupont.

Shortly after 4 a.m. Tuesday, the Jefferson County Sheriff's Department received a 911 call reporting that shots were fired at a residence in the 8000 block of North John Deere Road near Dupont. Deputies responding to the address located an adult male, who had sustained a gunshot wound, lying in the yard of the residence. The man was pronounced dead at the scene by the Jefferson County Coroner's Office.

Indiana State Police Investigators were requested to lead a homicide investigation into the shooting. The initial investigation indicates that an altercation at the residence led to shots being fired with the male shot at least once before he died as result of injuries he sustained.

The victim has been identified and his family has been notified but the name is being withheld at this time.

Flooding challenges HMI's mission to preserve Madison's past for the future

Staicer: Museum's damage bad but local residents have it tougher

BY BOB DEMAREE

As president and executive director of Historic Madison Inc., John Staicer knows how important historic preservation is to the City of Madison.

But on Tuesday afternoon, as he worked to clean up flood damage to the Schroeder Saddletree Factory Museum and the African Methodist Episcopal Church in downtown Madison, Staicer was thinking more about the other residents and neighbors who were impacted by Saturday's flash flooding.

"Our damage was bad," Staicer said, but for "those who lost houses and possessions, and didn't have flood insurance, it's much harsher" and what they are going through is horrible.

On Friday, Staicer and his wife, Maureen, had left Madison for a vacation and were in Akron, Ohio, when she saw posts on Facebook about flooding in Madison.

Bob Demaree

John Staicer, president and executive director of Historic Madison Inc., shows how high a 1902 flash flood reached on the walls of the Schoeder Saddletree Factory home. By comparison, water from Saturday's flash flood, reached about half as high onto the same brick wall at the museum.

"When I saw it was over the bridge" at Crooked Crook on Milton Street, "I knew it was not good and I came back here. Over the years, I've seen floods come and go on Crooked Creek, but never over top of the bridge, so I knew that it was bad news for Saddletree."

Historic Madison Inc. has owned the Schroeder Saddletree Factory since the 1970s, and Staicer said "this is the worst we have seen," in terms of flooding during that time. In the past there has been high water but never enough

Two queens to reign for Regatta Festival

Ferris, Royce to be crowned Monday

BY BOB DEMAREE

The 2021 Madison Regatta & Roostertail Music Festival will have two queens — Chloe Ferris and Katie Royce — who will be crowned at 6:30 p.m. on Monday at the Regatta Judges Stand on Vaughn Drive.

Chloe Ferris

Katie Royce

The pageant was completely canceled in 2020 — along with the rest of the events — due to the COVID-19 pandemic and this year's event saw only two contestants register by the extended deadline. It was decided that they should share the crown with both contestants reigning throughout the Regatta Festival. The 2019 Regatta Queen, Kennedy Rachelle Easton, will be on hand Monday to participate in the crowning.

Ferris and Royce are both 2021 graduates of Madison Consolidated High School. Ferris is the daughter of Scott and Nicole Ferris and will be attending Manchester University. Royce is the daughter of Jennifer and Bill DeVries and Jamie and Becky Royce and will be attending Bellarmine University.

8 to compete for Miss Jefferson County Fair

BY BOB DEMAREE

Eight girls will compete in the Miss Jefferson County 4-H Fair Pageant on Saturday at North Madison Christian Church.

The girls will be judged in three categories — interview, professional wear and formal wear — and the queen and her court will serve at the county fair as well as other community activities throughout the following year. The queen will represent Jefferson County and compete at the state pageant in January 2022.

"We are very excited about this group of girls and proud of their involvement in our community," said Cara Fox, pageant director. "It is a wonderful opportunity to serve locally."

The contestants include: Caroline Bechman, a Madison Consolidated High School graduate, daughter of Chance and Carrie Bechman; Olivia Bruce, a Southwestern High School

Madison City Council OKs disaster declaration extension

Residents appeal for flood help now, future

BY MARK CAMPBELL

In a meeting attended by several residents appealing for help recovering from Saturday's flash flood — and a pleading for the city to look into the problems causing the floods in the future — Madison City Council on Tuesday approved a resolution extending a local disaster declaration issued by Mayor Bob Courtney indefinitely.

Madison to opt out of opioid settlement for now

City to pursue better deal on its own

BY MARK CAMPBELL

The City of Madison on Tuesday joined several other Indiana cities who are opting out of the state's proposed lawsuit settlement with opioid manufacturers and distributors in an effort to strike a better settlement on their own.

Madison Mayor Bob Courtney asked for and received unanimous city council approval of a resolution to withdraw from the state's proposed settlement on the advice of the city's legal representation in the class action lawsuit. Under the deal struck by the AG's office, Indiana would receive about $540 million paid out over 10 years but the breakdown on who receives the money has several cities opting to wage their own litigation with hopes of reaching their own deal.

Under the Indiana's plan, the state will receive 15% of any settlement, localities will split 15% and the Family and Social Services Administration will get 70% to distribute around the state, with local governments deciding how to spend about half of that.

Courtney said by opting out, the cities will have 60 days to reach their own deal at which time they can either accept that agreement or opt back into the state's settlement under the terms already specified.

"This just gives us more control of the settlement discussion than the Attorney General," Courtney said, adding that opting out could result in the cities having "more control over how the money comes in" as well as the ability to assess the opioid epidemic's impact on their individual communities rather than being lumped into the state as a whole.

Courtney said by pursuing the litigation on their own, cities can do "more comprehensive analysis of the damage being done by opioids rather than basing it on population."

Madison joins the suburban Indianapolis cities of Fishers and Noblesville who recently joined Indianapolis, South Bend, Lafayette and other municipalities in deciding to forgo potential payments from the lawsuits filed by Indiana's attorney general's office.

Fort Wayne, Indiana's second-largest city, gave preliminary approval Tuesday to doing the same, with its city council expected to vote on the matter Tuesday.

Noblesville city attorney Lindsey Bennett said if the city north of Indianapolis had continued as part of the attorney general's lawsuits it would have to drop its own suits. That would likely result in it receiving less money than through its own suits against opioid makers and distributors, she said.

"We would not be able to recover that money from the several lawsuits we've filed on our own. And it is unlikely we would recover as much money in the state's lawsuit," Bennett said.

A state law signed by Gov. Eric Holcomb this year requires cities and counties that want to pursue their own legal action to "opt out" of the attorney general's lawsuits by June 30.

About half of Indiana's cities and counties have filed lawsuits against opioid manufacturers, distributors and dispensers, seeking to recover funds they have spent on police, fire, treatment programs and prevention in response to opioid abuse.

Those municipalities sued more opioid-related companies than the state did and they have said they believe they'll get better settlements on their own. Indianapolis, for example, sued 20 companies.

Cory Voight, director of complex litigation for the attorney general's office, said Indiana has filed suits against four defendants and may participate in a fifth: Purdue Pharma, maker of OxyContin, and the Sackler family, the company's owners; Cardinal Health; McKesson; AmerisourceBergen; and Janssen, a subsidiary of Johnson & Johnson.

The attorney general's office said in a statement that it was hopeful the dissenting cities would reconsider and rejoin the state's lawsuits.

"Our goal from the beginning has been to partner with cities, towns and counties by splitting the proceeds evenly between the state and local communities," the office said in the statement.

DNR probing songbird deaths and illnesses in Jefferson, 4 other counties

BY THE COURIER STAFF

State wildlife officials are investigating reports of dead and dying songbirds in Jefferson and four other Indiana counties that suffered from ailments seen in birds in several other states.

The Indiana Department of Natural Resources said Tuesday it's working with the Indiana Animal Disease Diagnostic Laboratory and the USGS National Wildlife Health Center in its investigation.

The bird deaths and illnesses have been reported in Jefferson, Clark and Monroe counties in southern Indiana and LaGrange and Lake counties in northern Indiana, the DNR said.

Several bird species, including blue jay, American robin and Northern cardinal have been affected and displayed neurological signs of illness as well as eye swelling and crusty discharge.

The DNR said that all of the bird samples submitted to date have tested negative for avian influenza and West Nile virus, but final laboratory diagnostic results are pending.

Meanwhile, officials in Kentucky are investigating similar complaints there and asking residents in some counties to stop feeding birds and for anyone who encounters a sick or dying bird to report it online.

Reports of sick and dying birds in Kentucky have come from Jefferson, Kenton and Boone counties, the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources said in a news release. The illness has affected blue jays, common grackles and European starlings so far but others may also be affected.

Reports of sick and dying birds in Kentucky also include swollen eyes with crusty discharge and neurological signs. Samples have been sent for testing to the Southeastern Cooperative Wildlife Disease Study at the University of Georgia.

In addition to Indiana and Kentucky, similar problems have been reported in Maryland, Ohio, Virginia, Washington, D.C. and West Virginia.

The following recommendations are good practice for anyone who experiences sick or dead wild birds on their property:

- Report the incident to DNR staff.
- Stop feeding birds until the mortality event has concluded.
- Clean feeders and baths with a 10% bleach solution.
- Avoid handling birds. If you need to handle birds, wear disposable gloves.
- When removing dead birds, wear disposable gloves and place birds and gloves in a sealable plastic bag to dispose with household trash.
- Keep pets away from sick or dead birds as a precaution.

Hoosiers can alert DNR staff of sick or dead wildlife online at on.IN.gov/sickwildlife. To report sick or dying birds in Kentucky, visit www.research.net/r/2021KYSickBirdReports or the Bird Mortality Event webpage on the department's website.

"I suppose I should back up a bit and tell the story that came before that injury in 2008. My father, Mark Cisenas, was a very gifted musician. He played in several bands like Vicious Blend and Square One. He was actually a good friend of Greg Ziesemer, who many people will remember from his time here in Madison. Greg is a heck of a singer and player.

"Anyway, dad played a lot of instruments, like guitar, keys, harmonica and bass. But he didn't play drums. So naturally I was recruited to be the family drummer. I took some lessons and I got to where I could hold a beat. But I gravitated to guitar and bass.

At some point when I was about 17 years old some friends asked me, had I ever met Jimmy Davis? They said he was this great guitar player and I might like to play with him. And it turned out I'd grown up like half a mile from his house, but I'd never gotten to know him. He was a couple years older than me.

"But in time I did meet Jimmy, and he asked me to play bass in his band. And we played a lot of gigs over about a 10 year period. Like, a whole lot. That was back in the Madtucky Band days, and then at Jimmy Davis Band. So many shows at JoeyG's and the Electric Lady. Great memories. But then I injured my shoulder and I really couldn't even hold a bass anymore.

"Now it's been 12 or so (years) and the shoulder is mostly healed. So I picked up the old bass and I let Jimmy know I was available. The first big show back was the big Boone Derby Party over at Richwood Plantation back in May. Man, I practiced for six weeks before that gig, learning all the songs.

"And it was great! All the wonderful things I like about performing and playing with other musicians came flooding back. It really wet my appetite. I'm ready to get back to a regular playing schedule.

"I will say after being out of the game for over a decade that the important things have not changed. The spirit and ambition among the area musicians are still there. Most of the players get along very well, with a lot of cross-pollinating and collaboration.

"And the scene has gotten even bigger and better, with the Taproom and the Red Bicycle Hall and Mad Paddle all featuring regular live music. I'm sad to see the Electric Lady is still not open to the public and going strong. I spent a lot of time on that stage, for sure.

"But for my part, I just want to get out there again. Get back to playing steady. Maybe write some new songs. I'm seeing guys again from 10 years ago and they're all saying, man, it's great to see you out again. Well, it's great to be out, that's for sure. And hopefully I'm here to stay this time!"

HOT TIP OF THE WEEK

If you look at the Thursday calendar you will see something special ... Thursday music is back at Off Broadway Taproom! Owner Ryan Shaw is getting back to his full five-day a week schedule as fast as he can. On Friday AND Saturday at Mad Paddle Brewstillery you can catch Nashville recording artist Rhonda Funk. I caught her show several months back at Mad Paddle and she is the real deal. Check her out. And on Saturday at the RiverBoat Inn there's a band with a great name, Mike Milligan & Steam Shovel. Sometimes that's all the reason you need! See you out there.

Court declines Indiana vote-by-mail limits case

INDIANAPOLIS — The U.S. Supreme Court has declined to hear a case challenging Indiana's vote-by-mail restrictions, a rebuff that means a federal court will decide the future of absentee voting in the state.

Monday's decision by the high court follows a federal appeals court's ruling in October rejecting a lawsuit that aimed to make mail-in ballots available to all Indiana voters last November due to the pandemic.

The case now returns before a federal judge in Indianapolis, where it began, The Indianapolis Star reported.

In October, a three-judge panel of 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals found that Indiana's limits in state law don't violate voters' constitutional rights. That decision upheld an August ruling that state officials had discretion in how to allow mail voting and that voters not wanting to cast ballots on Election Day could go to early voting sites for nearly a month before then.

Indiana's mail-in voting limits allow people to vote by mail only if they fall into one of several categories, including being 65 or older or being absent from their home counties on Election Day.

Plaintiffs in the case argued that Indiana's age restriction for absentee voters infringes upon the constitutional right to participate in the polls. It is one of 11 state restrictions that define who can and can't vote by mail.

Indiana's election commission waived those requirements during last year's primary elections because it recognized that the pandemic hindered safety at the voting booth. Plaintiffs tried to get a federal judge to require the commission to extend that allowance to November, but the judge declined.

Indiana Vote By Mail, a nonprofit and one of 13 plaintiffs in the lawsuit, said Tuesday that the plaintiffs were "gravely disappointed" by the high court's decision.

DNR: $2.5M fire at Patoka was accident

BIRDSEYE — A February fire that destroyed 11 boats at a southern Indiana reservoir and damaged numerous other vessels was most likely started by an electrical malfunction, authorities said.

The Indiana Department of Natural Resources said Tuesday that an investigation by conservation officers and the State Fire Marshal's Office concluded that the Feb. 19 fire at the Hoosier Hills Marina on Patoka Lake was accidental in nature.

An electrical malfunction was determined to be the most likely cause of the fire, which destroyed 11 boats and damaged another 11, causing an estimated $2.5 million in of damage, the DNR said.

Investigators said marina staff tried to extinguish the fire and successfully moved two boats from the docks, creating a fire break as flames spread.

Patoka Lake is an 8,800-acre reservoir that's home to bald eagle nesting sites and is located about 50 miles northeast of Evansville.

In Loving Memory Of

Mrs. Janis Kay Smith

Mrs. Janis Kay Smith passed away June 21, 2021. Janis was born on May 25, 1956 to the late Mike and Frances Breen. Being a mom and grandma was the best part of her life. She loved spending time with family and her dogs.

A father's lasting legacy

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

Dear Annie: Your solicitation for a Father's Day story made me contemplate my life. I have been very blessed. My biological father is still with us at 89. He was an example of volunteerism and strength. He was always involved at church and in Boy Scouts.

Unfortunately, he was an alcoholic, but he has been sober for 35 years; he recovered and strengthened his marriage and still attends daily Alcoholics Anonymous meetings to support the recovery of others.

My childhood friend's dad had cardiac issues and was disabled. He built his own home and could fix anything. He taught me to be handy and loved to drive around and explore the local area. Another friend's dad taught me to fish and hunt. He helped me buy my first shotgun 45 years ago. Another friend's dad owned a campground. He taught me to drive a tractor and lawn mower. He taught me to use a chainsaw and to fell a tree. Another friend's dad taught me how to drink responsibly and offered many lessons on life. I was with him moments before a tragic accident that took his life. Again, I have been blessed with so many strong fathers! — Surrounded by Strong Father Figures

Dear Father Figures: Thank you for your letter.

Dear Annie: I have never written to you, but your request asking readers to tell about their fathers inspired me.

My father died when I was 12 years old. I am an only child. He was my best friend. In my short time with him, two things stick out in my mind.

First, he told me when I was 10 that if I never smoked, he would buy me a car when I was 16. He was not around to buy me that car (and my mother could not afford to), but I can honestly say I have NEVER smoked a cigarette or any other form of tobacco. I know my father's heavy smoking led to his heart attack and early death.

Second, he insisted on checking my fingernails before we sat down at any meal. If my nails were dirty, which they rarely were, I had to go to the bathroom and clean them. To this day, I notice the fingernails of those I share meals with. If they are dirty, it bothers me to no end. I instilled this cleanliness in my children. — Left Me Too Young but With Some Good Lessons

Dear Too Young: I'm sorry for your loss. Your father sounded like a very kind and wise man who taught you some very practical and important life skills and habits.

Dear Annie: My wonderful father left me a legacy of love. He taught me to love God, to treat others the way I wanted to be treated, and to always be honest and have integrity. I lost him at age 21, and I am now 75. I feel his presence to this day, and he makes me smile. — Blessed in Florida

Dear Blessed in Florida: A legacy of love will lead you to a lifetime of happiness and peace.

When to move in together

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

Dear Annie: Recently, I left my husband of 17 years. He always had a problem being happy with just one woman, and he cheated on me multiple times. Mostly, I was able to push past it. But a couple of months ago, I learned that he slept with my only full-blooded sister 10 years ago. That was the last straw. I filed for divorce.

Since then, I've started seeing a longtime close friend. He works a lot, so we haven't been able to spend too much time together in person, but we talk on the phone every day, sometimes for four, five, even six hours. And when we are together, I feel wanted. I can see and feel the love in the way that he looks at me. We can sit around for hours, just cuddling and looking into each other's eyes. I've seen things like this in the movies but never imagined I'd have it in my life! I'd always disregarded the idea of soul mates, but now I truly feel that I have found mine.

Although we've only been dating a couple of months, we've been friends for more than a decade. We watched each other's kids grow up. We've been there for each other through relationship issues and divorces (his and now mine). My question to you: When would it be wise for us to move in with each other? Every time we are together, it's getting so much harder for us to say goodbye. We live pretty far apart and both have busy work schedules, so we are always stretched for time. We have discussed the possibility of living together but agreed we do not want to ruin this amazing thing we have going by rushing. But how long do we have to wait? — Head Over Heels

Dear Head Over Heels: While you've known each other as friends for quite some time, you're still just barely acquainted as lovers, and that's different. Give it another six months or so, until your divorce is finalized and those butterflies in your stomach have settled a bit. Take time to understand how the other person works. See what happens when an argument or conflict arises: How does he handle it? Are you able to talk through it calmly together? Knowing these things upfront — ensuring a solid foundation — will help you two build a strong relationship that stands the test of time.

Dear Annie: The guy I've been seeing for five years has been seeing a married woman for 18 years. For context, we're all seniors. He's in his 80s; I'm in my 70s. The married woman is in her 60s.

The two of them have gone on road trips all over the country, visiting all 48 of the contiguous states in the country. Her husband has apparently been clueless this whole time, always thinking she's traveling with some girlfriend.

My boyfriend says he loves me more than her and that it will never truly work with her since they can't live together. But their interferes with ours. She's even come to his house when I've been there. (He wouldn't let her in, and she slapped him across both cheeks.) What should I do? I don't want to waste time on a loser. — Impatiently Waiting

Dear Impatiently: There's so much cheating going on here that it's hard to keep track. The worst part is that you're cheating yourself out of a caring relationship by sticking around for this two-timer. Break the chain of fools and free yourself up for better things, such as new hobbies, family, friends — and men without married girlfriends.

Bob Demaree

David Cart, director of preservation and maintenance for Historic Madison Inc., takes up linoleum damaged by Saturday's flash flooding at the Schroeder Saddletree Factory Museum. Several fans were moving air throughout the building to assist with drying the structure.

MISSION

to get into the museum while HMI has owned the property.

As a historian, Staicer is well aware of Madison's history with flooding and its impact on the Saddletree Factory property, which is located alongside Crooked Creek at 106 Milton Street. Located on the side of the Schroeder house is wording long ago etched into the bricks indicating the high water mark when the creek flooded in January of 1902.

On Tuesday Staicer pointed out darkened bricks — about 10 rows up on the structure — where Saturday's flood waters climbed.

Staicer said the flash flood put 18 inches of water into the front two rooms at the Saddletree home and water throughout the rest of house plus "a ton of mud in the basement," but none on the floors inside the Blacksmith and Assembly Shop building that sit at a higher point on the property. He also noted there was 12 inches of water in the ME Church property owned by HMI at 309 East Fifth Street, which flooded for the second time in six years after also being hit by a flash flooding in 2015.

Located in the front two rooms of the museum is the Schroeder's piano that visitors have been allowed to play when they tour the museum. Staicer is concerned whether it will ever play again. "It took in 18 inches of water, and we can clean it up and make it look nice again," but he's not sure if it will be playable.

Special period carpet, a replica of carpet from the house, was also soaked. The plan is to clean it if possible.

"I hope we can clean it up and re-lay it," he said, noting that will depend on how well it cleans. "Hopefully, the wool doesn't shrink so it can fit back into it."

Replica wallpaper also will need to be replaced, but before they can even do that they will need to check for plaster damage and possible structural damage and make sure the walls are dry.

"It's not just what you see on the surface," he noted.

Staicer estimates it will take some time for Saddletree Museum to be repaired and again open for tours. In addition to the force of the water, he said water also got into the house by soaking through the bricks.

"With thousands of gallons of water, it will take awhile to dry out," he said, adding that flood waters were left standing against the bricks for maybe a couple of hours — "long enough for the brick to absorb the moisture" and so that the wetness was still showing Tuesday afternoon.

"We are going to let the whole building dry and that could take a couple of months," he said.

At the same time, coping with the flood damage did allow another layer of history to be peeled away and exposed to historians. While removing flood-soaked linoleum from the 1950s or 1960s, they found an even older linoleum that he thinks dates back to the 1920s.

"We found out more history about the building," Staicer said, describing the discovery as a "mixed bag" because "I didn't want to learn it this way."

Staicer said damage to the AME Church was mostly from water and mud and that except for a few benches there has been "nothing in there since the last flood."

"We had taken everything out," he added, noting HMI just recently received a grant to repair the mechanics of the building destroyed by the 2015 flood.

"We want to rebuild in a way so that it's flood proof" in terms of the electrical system, air conditioning and heating system by placing those systems "high enough from the ground to not be impacted."

Staicer said while they can't stop water from getting into the building during flash flooding, maybe they can "mitigate the flooding by moving the mechanics up above."

There's plenty of work ahead in recovering from Saturday's flood — as well as the one from 2015 — but Staicer said all HMI can do is keep moving forward in its mission to preserve Madison's past for the future.

"We'll get it back together sooner or later," he said.

COUNCIL

A powerful thunderstorm dumped an estimated 6-8 inches of rainfall on Madison and nearby areas late Friday night and early Saturday morning, resulting in a flash flood that swept through the North Walnut Street neighborhood, as well as other areas in downtown Madison, forcing the emergency evacuation of 35 residents and damaging more than 60 homes and businesses.

Courtney asked city council to extend his declaration — it legally can remain in place only seven days without council approval — to allow the city the best opportunity of receiving state and federal disaster assistance to help pay for the cleanup and provide assistance to those impacted by the flooding.

"We are continuing to coordinate with state and federal officials," said Courtney, who noted the city is now under two public health declarations since the COVID-19 declaration issued last year is still in effect. "We need to keep this in place until it's rescinded and not rescind it until we exhaust all options for state and federal assistance."

"We need to figure out how we can mitigate this in the future — not prevent it — because this was a natural disaster affecting miles around."

— Mayor Bob Courtney

The council unanimously approved the mayor's request but asked for a clarification on who and how the declaration can be rescinded when the time comes.

According to Courtney, based on the damage report in downtown Madison — mainly in the neighborhoods around North Walnut Street but also at other locations along the path of Crooked Creek — as well as on the Madison hilltop, that may not be something the city has to consider for some time. He said it could depend on how soon Gov. Eric Holcomb decides on a state disaster declaration.

"My heart goes out to you. I grew up there and I have friends there," Courtney said, referring to his childhood on Walnut Street. "Five to six inches of rain overwhelms all the tributaries and storm drains. I've seen pictures where I thought I was looking at the Ohio River. I was on-site and saw the destruction for myself."

He added that there are a number of communities in Indiana that are hurting just like Madison and a disaster declaration by the governor would trigger state and federal assistance for all and Holcomb's office is currently collecting damage totals to assist in that decision.

Either way Courtney said the recovery will take time and be painful. City workers have already hauled away 100,000 pounds of wet debris from area homes and Courtney said the crews will continue picking up debris "as long as it takes."

Much of that debris used to be the hard-earned — and in many cases cherished — belongings of residents and several home owners and renters attended Tuesday's meeting and spoke of the pain and fear they experienced during Saturday's flooding and the frustration they're feeling now during the cleanup.

Pointing to a flash flood in 2015, several visitors reminded the council that this is not the first time they've been hit. There were tears and anger and a call for help in cleaning up the mess and getting back on their feet physically and financially as well as a call for something to be done to prevent such flooding from happening again.

Jayme Brashier, of 905 Walnut Street, said she is "largely in shock from the devastation" and the "emotional and financial and physical" toll after having her home flooded a second time in six years and seeing her third vehicle lost to flood water.

"I'm still working on replacing the things I lost from the 2015 flood," Brashier said, noting she had just paid off the car she bought when her other vehicle was destroyed in 2015. "I owned my home outright in 2015 and I was making it a showplace ... now I've got a disaster loan that I'll be paying on for 20 years and I no longer own my home."

Brashier said she now has a flood insurance policy with a $4,000 annual premium due to her home's location in a flood path and even that insurance is unlikely to cover her latest losses not to mention the things that cannot be replaced.

"Nobody is going to make me whole ... nobody is going to make us whole on the heirlooms and collectibles I wanted to pass on to my children," she said.

Other residents focused on the terror of being in the flash flood and knowing that you're stranded in the path of something you have no control over and having to ride it out waiting for help.

"You guys have no idea what it feels like to have water running by your house — all away around it — and you can't get out" said Cindy Bird, of 906 Walnut Street. "You have no idea what it feels like to have it rushing into your basement. It sounds like the river."

While Brashier said help from the city had been slow and she still had water to the top of her basement on Tuesday, Bird credited Courtney for being quick to the scene and with so much destruction, resources obviously were stretched.

"Bob was wonderful. He was at my house that night ..." Bird said. "A lot of people are mad but we're mad at the system. We're not necessarily mad at you ... a lot of people don't think you did great, but I think you did great."

However, Bird did point out that Saturday's flood marks the second time in six years that the neighborhood has been hit hard and something needs to be done. Jim Cunningham, of 426 Moody Park Lane, agreed, noting the small mobile home park he owns on Moody Park Lane was hit in 2015, too, but nothing like Saturday morning.

"I'm 63 and that's the first time water has got up in those mobile homes," Cunningham said.

He said the neighborhood "never flooded" until the new US 421 route was built to the hilltop and suggested that development on the east end of the hilltop — shopping malls, department stores, a hospital, churches and the roundabout — are releasing water more quickly into Crooked Creek where it all comes down on the northeast end of the downtown. He said he'd had heard the Army Corps of Engineers had studied the area at one point in the early 1990s and suggested that finding a copy of that report could shed some light on how to slow storm water from slamming the neighborhood again.

Courtney said the city's first task is to assist with the cleanup and pursue any and all help that is available for residents, renters, business owners and the city.

He also noted that Saturday's storm was unprecedented in size and scope and that areas of Madison and Jefferson County other than the North Walnut Street neighborhood were hit hard as well as other communities in the state.

"This flash flood affected property 5 miles from here," Courtney noted. "There were businesses on Wilson Avenue on the hilltop that had 2- to 3-feet of water in them ... it didn't start downtown but it dropped downtown."

He said the response will require a "multi-jurisdictional effort" involving city, county, state and federal resources" to overcome but the city can be thankful that there was no loss of life.

"We need to figure out how we can mitigate this in the future — not prevent it — because this was a natural disaster affecting miles around," Courtney said, noting the community needs to first find financial assistance and then strategies for mitigation.

MADISON COURIER BOYS GOLFER OF THE YEAR

Consistency serves Ommen well on the course

BY DAVID CAMPBELL

There are a lot of words one can use to describe Luke Ommen as a golfer but one, above all others, stands out: Consistent.

Easily the most consistent golfer in the area, Ommen rode that even play to a terrific senior season at Madison Consolidated High School, winning the Hoosier Hills Conference championship and missing the state finals by just three strokes.

That consistency didn't just appear. Although Ommen is a stand-out basketball player — he earned First Team All-Courierarea honors this season — he's a golfer first and foremost and nearly every day, weather permitting, he is on the course improving his game.

"His work ethic is what makes him stand out," Madison coach Chris Conner said. "There are a lot of them that are out here every day, but Luke has been out here day and night. And he's not jut beating it around the course; he's working on the little things, chipping and putting. He has put in the time and he deserves the credit. He's a great player."

That consistency and success on the course makes Ommen this year's Madison Courier Boys Golfer of the Year. While he posted rounds that he wasn't happy with, he rarely ventured outside of the 70s and was always near the top of the leaderboard.

"I definitely had some ups and I definitely had some downs, but overall I played pretty consistent and had a pretty good senior season," Ommen said.

Nina Campbell

Consistency has served him well, even if championships didn't follow. He lost an epic five-hole playoff to Henryville's Westin Allen for low-medalist of the Madison Invitational at Sunrise Golf Course in April and finished three strokes back of Allen as runnerup of the IHSAA Sectional — also at Sunrise — earlier this month.

But in between, he put together an impressive one-over 73 to win a Hoosier Hills Conference championship, giving Madison a sweep of low-medalist in the event in its final season in the league after Keara Eder won

H1 Series ready to hit the water after 21-month layoff

Bernard to serve as primary driver of the HomeStreet this weekend

BY DAVID CAMPBELL

Jeff Bernard is hoping to turn his virtual experience into real-world success when the H1 Unlimited Racing Series gets back to work this weekend at Guntersville Lake in Alabama after 21 months of near-inactivity.

Other than a few test sessions, there has been little on-water action from the series since it last raced in San Diego in September 2019 and lot has changed with several drivers jumping to new teams and one familiar face coming back to the series after seven years away.

Bernard is one of those new faces, in a round-about way. The veteran Unlimited driver with three wins to his credit at this level, joined the Miss Madison Racing Team in 2019 as pilot of the team's second boat, which was sponsored by Oberto Specialty Meats and he can't wait to get to work this weekend.

Because of the uncertainties surrounding this season, the Miss Madison Racing Team has opted to run only one boat with drivers Bernard and Jimmy Shane splitting time in the cockpit, which will run as the U-1 Miss HomeStreet. According to Bernard, the latest plan is to have him serve as primary driver at Guntersville with Shane getting one heat of racing, and then the pair will switch for Madison with Shane getting most of the seat time and Bernard one heat.

"The plan could change, but that's the latest," Bernard said. "I'm excited and just glad to get back on the water."

Like everybody else, Bernard sat out last season due to the COVID-19 pandemic but he was able to get some seat time by running in three "outlaw" inboard races — unsanctioned events that do not officially count.

To satisfy his Unlimited cravings, Bernard competed in the H1 Unlimited Virtual Series that was contested on Hydro-Sim software. Bernard finished the season as the driver's champion.

It was in that series that Bernard got his first taste of the Guntersville Lake course. Having never been to Alabama, the video game is Bernard's only experience on the 2-mile circuit.

"I'm expecting it to be a lot like Tri-Cities. Other than the pits being so far away from the course, it seems to be very similar," Bernard said. "I have run that course a thousand times on the Hydro-Sim game to get ready and I have watched a ton of videos on YouTube. I think that gives me a good idea and, after a couple of test sessions, we should be all right."

Although the team has opted to run its older, 2007-vintage boat rather than the newer 2018 boat, Bernard believes that he has more than enough equipment to win races.

He steered the 2007 craft in 2019 and knows it's capability.

"When we ran (in 2019), we had to make do with whatever was left over. Now, we have all of the props, all of the gears, all of the engines, everything that we need," Bernard said. "This is a very fast boat. Sure, the newer boat is more efficient and corners better, but with all of the primary equipment, this is a very fast boat. In 2014, this boat did a 166 (mph) at San Diego and I was with another team and we got to see the data and it was a legal 166. The new boat has never done 166. This is a very fast boat and I'm excited."

Bernard, whose first win at the Unlimited level came at Madison in 2008, said he was excited to add his name to the long list of Miss Madison drivers dating back to 1961.

NCAA could seek once-radical solutions after high court loss

BY RALPH D. RUSSO
AP COLLEGE SPORTS WRITER

Embedded in Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh's scathing rebuke of the NCAA and its rules were a few suggestions on how college sports can be reformed to avoid being sued into oblivion.

"Legislation would be one option," Kavanaugh wrote in a concurrence to the Supreme Court's unanimous ruling against the NCAA on Monday. "Or colleges and student athletes could potentially engage in collective bargaining (or seek some other negotiated agreement) to provide student athletes a fairer share of the revenues that they generate for their colleges, akin to how professional football and basketball players have negotiated for a share of league revenues."

That might sound a bit radical, but Kavanaugh is not the first person to make the suggestions.

The Knight Commission on Intercollegiate Athletics, as part of its detailed proposal to reorganize the NCAA, has recommended seeking an antitrust exemption from Congress as a way to rein in spending in big-time college sports.

Just last month, Sen. Chris Murphy (D-Conn.) introduced a bill that would give college athletes the right to organize — though not necessarily unionize — and collectively bargain with schools and conferences.

After the NCAA's stinging loss this week, college sports leaders are acknowledging the path forward will have to include changes that once seemed antithetical to the mission. Southeastern Conference Commissioner Greg Sankey said the Supreme Court's opinion in the Alston case provided "clarity."

"What also is clear is the need for continuing evaluation of the collegiate model consistent with the court's decision and message," Sankey said.

Len Elmore, the former Maryland basketball star and member of the Knight Commission, said the conversation about college sports has been "hijacked" by framing the athletes as labor.

"It's not a truth. And yes, there is inequity. There's no question. And people talk about how a coach is making millions and institutions building literal shrines and facilities," said Elmore, who is also a lawyer, "You know, that can certainly be fixed."

The NCAA once tried to put limits on the salaries of some assistant coaches and lost in court.

Elmore said the way to curb the arms race at the top of college sports — where it is increasingly common for top assistant football coaches at Power Five schools to have million-dollar salaries —- is to turn to Congress.

"So why not attack it from the other end where you don't ... place college sports in jeopardy through pay-for-play. You can control spending," Elmore said.

The Knight Commission has recommended the NCAA and College Football Playoff seek a conditional antitrust exemption to control costs and conference-level agreements to cap operating budgets, including coaching salaries.

Lloyd makes U.S. soccer team for her 4th Olympic Games

BY ANNE M. PETERSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Carli Lloyd is headed to her fourth Olympics after all.

The 38-year-old Lloyd had vowed after the 2019 World Cup that she would push to make the team for Tokyo before stepping away from the sport. But then the games were pushed back a year because of the coronavirus, and Lloyd needed surgery on her knee.

So making the 18-player roster was by no means a slam dunk for Lloyd, who scored three goals in the opening 16 minutes of the 2015 World Cup final in Canada. Vlatko Andonovski announced his Olympic squad on Wednesday. Tobin Heath joins Lloyd in heading to her fourth Olympics.

At the 2008 Beijing Games, Lloyd scored in overtime for a 1-0 victory against Brazil in the final. Four years later, she scored both goals in the gold-medal match against Japan at Wembley Stadium, becoming the only player to score winning goals in consecutive Olympic finals.

Lloyd, who will turn 39 before the Tokyo Games, is the oldest national team Olympian, besting Christie Rampone, who was 37 when she played at the 2012 London Games.

Heath did not play in the national team's recent Summer Series in Texas because of a knee injury. Julie Ertz is also recovering from an injury but should be ready when the United States opens the Olympics on July 21 against Sweden.

Becky Sauerbrunn, Kelley O'Hara, Alex Morgan and Megan Rapinoe will be playing in their third Olympics.

Abby Dahlkemper, Tierna Davidson, Emily Sonnett, Rose Lavelle and goalkeeper Adrianna Franch are first-time Olympians, as are sisters Samantha and Kristie Mewis.

Kristie Mewis is the only player on the roster who was not on the 2019 World Cup-winning team. She and Samantha are the first sisters to play for the senior national team in a world championship.

"We know there are some very talented players that won't be in Japan, but these were the difficult decisions that we had to make," Andonovski said in a statement. "We have a very experienced roster that has been through adversity at the highest levels, so it's no surprise those players have distinguished themselves. They've embraced the challenges and have shown tremendous flexibility and determination over the past 15 months to get us to where we are today."

Andonovski also named four alternates that will travel to Tokyo with the team: Goalkeeper Jane Campbell, defender Casey Krueger, midfielder Catarina Macario and forward Lynn Williams.

The United States is vying to become the first team to win an Olympics following a World Cup title. The Americans have won four gold medals since women's soccer became an Olympic sport in 1996. But at the last Olympics in Brazil, the United States was knocked out by Sweden on penalties in the quarterfinals.

Nearly 100 boats expected to compete in Holt Memorial race

BY THE COURIER STAFF

Nearly 100 boats in 13 different classes will compete in the 2021 Dennis Holt Memorial RC Regatta presented by Craig Toyota and L&N Machine Saturday on Krueger Lake.

With boats of all sizes and speeds, the event offers something for everybody including, for the first time in this district, the Ready to Run Fast Electric novice class. This class was created for first time drivers and features stock off-the-shelf boats that keep the competition even and allows racers to get a full hands-on experience for the ins and outs of the sport.

For those familiar with the Unlimited hydroplanes of past and present, the Regatta currently has 21 boats registered that are in one of two classes that follow a strict set of rules where boats must resemble a current or past Unlimited/Vintage hydroplane down to the smallest detail. Due to the extra detail involved in these two classes, the event awards a Concourse Best of Award to one boat in each class that most accurately matches one of the current or past boats. Those two awards are being sponsored by FatBoyz of Madison.

The event is free to the public with racing beginning between 8:30 and 9 a.m. and running all day, with three rounds of races per class creating for a non-stop action. Spectators are asked to try to park more to the east side (US 421 side) of the lake to allow racers to set up as close to the pit area as possible. The Ryker's Ridge Volunteer Fire Department will operate concessions at lunch time, with all proceeds supporting the fire department.

The organizing group's Facebook page, Prop Walkers Model Boat Club, will provide updates and also includes smaller club races scheduled throughout the summer that are free to the public to watch as well.

Naquin's 9th-inning homer delivers Reds a 10-7 victory against Twins

BY DAVE CAMPBELL
ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS — The Cincinnati Reds didn't look drained to manager David Bell, despite this recent slide.

The boss was right, because the Reds had plenty of energy left for a late surge against Minnesota after the Twins took a game of back-and-forth rallies the night before.

Tyler Naquin went 4 for 4 with a three-run homer that broke a ninth-inning tie right after the ragged Cincinnati bullpen lost a five-run lead, and the Reds beat the Twins 10-7 to stop their five-game losing streak on Tuesday afternoon.

Amir Garrett got his fourth save in six chances with a scoreless ninth after fellow relievers Art Warren, Lucas Sims and Tejay Antone stumbled through a five-run eighth for Minnesota, which had its season-long five-game winning streak end.

"We keep pulling for each other, keep showing up, keep playing hard," said Naquin, who joined the Reds in February on a minor league contract.

Tucker Barnhart homered and had three RBIs and Jesse Winker hit a two-run double for the Reds, whose relief ERA (5.70) is the worst in the major leagues. Injuries have made an impact on that, to be sure, and Bell did not sound bothered by the way he's seen his relievers throw the ball lately.

"There's no question we're just going to keep getting better. There's been signs along the way," he said. "I love the way the guys are approaching it."

Wade Miley gave the Reds another strong start, too, with two runs allowed on a homer by Ryan Jeffers over seven otherwise-easy innings.

Twins 7, Reds 5 — The longest game in the major leagues this year left the Minnesota Twins feeling emotionally spent.

Their best winning streak of the season is still going, but center fielder Byron Buxton has been sidelined once again.

Miguel Sanó hit a two-run homer in the 12th inning to lift Minnesota past Cincinnati 7-5 on Monday night — the fifth straight victory for the Twins and fifth loss in a row for the Reds.

The game lasted 5:14 and ended 30 minutes past midnight, after beginning on a somber note with a remembrance of the late Mike Bell — the former Reds player and Twins coach who died of cancer this year. Bell was the younger brother of Cincinnati manager David Bell.

Nick Castellanos, in a 5-for-26 slide, gave the Reds the lead with a single in the 10th against Jorge Alcala for his first RBI in eight games. Suárez, who had an earlier two-run homer, added a sacrifice fly to turn the game over to Sean Doolittle.

The left-hander gave up an RBI double to Luis Arraez and a sacrifice fly to Trevor Larnach as the Twins sent a game to the 11th inning for the first time this season.

They're 3-8 in 10-inning games.

VOTTO SUSPENDED

Cincinnati Reds first baseman Joey Votto served a one-game suspension from Major League Baseball on Tuesday, three days after he was ejected for arguing with an umpire.

Votto was already slated to rest in the finale of a two-game series at Minnesota, an afternoon start following a 12-inning contest on Monday night that was MLB's longest game of the season at 5:16. Shortly before first pitch, the Reds announced Votto was serving his punishment.

Votto and Reds manager David Bell were tossed in the first inning on Saturday at San Diego after a heated spat with home plate umpire Ryan Additon after Votto was called out on a checked swing. Padres catcher Webster Rivas appealed after Votto offered at a high, outside pitch, and third base umpire Chris Guccione confirmed that Votto went around.

Tokyo shapes up to be No-Fun Olympics

BY STEPHEN WADE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — The Tokyo Olympics, already delayed by the pandemic, are not looking like much fun: Not for athletes. Not for fans. And not for the Japanese public. They are caught between concerns about the coronavirus at a time when few are vaccinated on one side and politicians who hope to save face by holding the games and the International Olympic Committee with billions of dollars on the line on the other.

Japan is famous for running on consensus. But the decision to proceed with the Olympics — and this week to permit some fans, if only locals — has shredded it.

"We have been cornered into a situation where we cannot even stop now. We are damned if we do, and damned if we do not," Kaori Yamaguchi, a member of the Japanese Olympic Committee and a bronze medalist in judo in 1988, wrote in a recent editorial published by the Kyodo news agency. "The IOC also seems to think that public opinion in Japan is not important."

Support for going ahead seems to be increasing, but there's persistent opposition with small street protests planned on Wednesday, one month before the July 23 opening. Much of that concern stems from qualms about the health risks. While the number of new cases has been receding in Tokyo, only about 7% of Japanese are fully vaccinated — and even though the government is now supercharging its vaccine drive after a slow start, the vast majority of the population still won't be immunized when the games start.

That's left the IOC and the Japanese government going through contortions to pulls this off. Dr. Shigeru Omi, the government's top COVID-19 adviser, called it "abnormal" to hold the world's biggest sports event during a pandemic. He also said the safest Olympics would be with no fans.

He was overruled on both counts by the government of Prime Minister Yoshihide Suga and organizers.

The official cost of the Tokyo Olympics is $15.4 billion, but government audits suggest it's twice that. All but $6.7 billion is public money. The IOC chips in only about $1.5 billion to the overall cost.

The pressure to hold the games is largely financial for the Switzerland-based IOC, a nonprofit but highly commercial body that earns 91% of its income from broadcast rights and sponsorship.

Japan is famous for running on consensus. But the decision to proceed with the Olympics — and this week to permit some fans, if only locals — has shredded it.

Estimates suggest a cancelation could cost it $3 billion to $4 billion in broadcast rights income.

Beyond financial concerns, putting on a successful Olympics is also a major source of pride for the host country. Some economists compare it to throwing a big party. You overspend but hope your guests go away bragging about the hospitality.

"It's a bit like a gambler who already has lost too much," said Koichi Nakano, a political scientist at Sophia University in Tokyo. "Pulling out of it now will only confirm the huge losses made, but carrying on you can still cling to the hope of winning big and taking it all back."

Before the postponement 15 months ago, Japan was on track to host a well-run if expensive Olympics. It had a beautiful new National Stadium by architect Kengo Kuma, meticulous organization, and a grand stage for a country that mounted historic games in 1964 — just 19 years after defeat in World War II. IOC President Thomas Bach called Tokyo the "best prepared Olympics ever" — and he still says it repeatedly.

But now, worries that the games will be become an incubator for the virus hang over them. For now, the rolling averages of deaths and cases have stabilized in a country that has reported more than 14,000 deaths — good by global standards but worse than many of its Asian neighbors.

While the games may still end up wowing television audiences who will tune in around the world, the pandemic has removed any sense of celebration. Athletes are meant to stay in the village or venues. Most others entering Japan for the Olympics can only shuttle between their hotels and venues for the first 14 days, must sign a pledge of follow the rules, and could have their movements monitored by GPS.

There will be no public viewing areas in Tokyo. The few fans who can attend venues must wear masks, social distance, refrain from cheering, and go straight home afterward. No stopping off at the local izakaya for beer and skewers of grilled chicken.

With spectators from overseas ruled out months ago, there's little business for hotels. Local sponsors have paid more than $3 billion to be involved, and some have complained about lost advertising possibilities.

Others have expressed concern about being tied to an event that's unpopular at home.

In perhaps a last-ditch effort to save some of the festive spirit, organizers said Tuesday they were looking into selling alcohol at the venues.

Olympic Minister Tamayo Marukawa indicated financial concerns were at play: Japanese brewer Asahi is one of the sponsors and has kicked millions into the local operating budget.

But after immediate pushback, organizing committee president Seiko Hashimoto reversed the decision at a Wednesday news conference.

"We decided as Tokyo 2020 not to sell alcoholic beverages and to ban drinking alcoholic beverages in the venues," she said.

And athletes who might want a drink to celebrate have been told by organizers to "drink alone" in their rooms.

"It's an honor to drive for this team. It's a historic team and I love being around everybody," Bernard said. "I enjoy working with (team president) Charlie Grooms, Larry Hanson is in my mind the best guy in the sport when it comes to gears and gear setup, and Mike Hanson is just the best all-around. It's fun to be here."

Bernard and the Miss HomeStreet will be one of seven boats expected to compete for the Southern Cup this weekend. Dave Villwock, whose 67 career wins are most all-time, is returning after a six-year hiatus and will steer the U-40 Miss Beacon Plumbing. J. Michael Kelly, who won the last three races of the 2019 season, has jumped to the new Strong Racing Team and will drive the U-8 Miss Tri-Cities, a former Miss Elam Plus hull.

the girls crown in the fall. While Ommen missed out on another trip to the state finals — his only trip came as a freshman in 2018 when he went as part of the team — the HHC title helped soothe the wound.

"That was the highlight of my senior season," Ommen said. "My first high school win. It felt good to win the conference the last year we were in it and it is one that I'll definitely remember for a while."

Ommen's next stop will be Berry College where he will play golf starting in the fall.

Ommen is just the latest Cub to hit the links at the next level and his coach believes he has what it takes to live up to the standards set recently by Austin Mahoney and Landon Connor, who have led Campbellsville University to a National Championship.

"I don't know exactly what Austin and Landon shot in high school but I can tell you that Luke is right there," said Chris Conner, who is also Landon's father. "He has everything they have and he's just as good. He can have the same type of career."

For Ommen, just getting a chance to play is all that he needs. A golfing lifer, he couldn't imagine being away from the game for long.

"I just love the game. It never gets boring. You can have the greatest round of your life one day and the next day, have the worst round of your life," Ommen said with a smile. "There is always something keeping you coming back."

That would mean more of the hundreds of millions in revenue brought in by the men's basketball tournament and major college football's postseasonp could be directed toward athlete welfare or even away from athletics altogether, Elmore said.

"Can you imagine placing the savings in controlled spending and those resources towards solutions to racial equity, greater safety with regard to things like head injuries and other things.

To try to achieve a greater understanding and remedies for the issues of mental health that student-athletes suffer. There's plenty to go around. But we're not thinking in those terms," he said.

Murphy is among several lawmakers on both sides of the aisle who have expressed a distrust of NCAA leadership and have made clear they are in no rush to bail out the association with antitrust protection.

"The NCAA collusion machine, designed to keep college athletes impoverished so the billions in profits can be kept for a small cabal of insiders, is finally starting to crumble to pieces," Murphy tweeted after the Supreme Court decision was announced.

Jay Bilas, the former Duke basketball player, ESPN analyst and vocal NCAA critic, said it is inevitable that players will eventually be paid now that the Supreme Court has called it "a serial antitrust violator." Bilas, who also has a law degree, said collective bargaining with the players provides the best path forward for college sports.

"The truth is, whether people want to admit it or not, when the players get paid now nobody's going to turn away from it now either," Bilas said. "It's going to continue to thrive and all that. This is not that big of a deal. It's just commerce. It's just business."
